

SHABASHNI MOODLEY is a Dreamer and a Sociologist who co-founded the Inkubator for Social Entrepreneurship. She hopes that this intervention will influence the dialogue, pedagogy and mobilization for community colleges in South Africa. She weaves words for public engagement, including Night Life in Durban and Racial Divisions for the edited book Undressing Durban (2007). She aspires to become a Professor so that she can teach Sociology at the secondary schools she lives amongst in Inanda, Kwamashu, Ntuzuma, and Newlands East. She is currently completing her PhD at UCT.

Dr MVUSELELO NGCOYA is an academic in Development Studies at UKZN. His areas of interest include indigenous knowledge systems, especially the social-political significance of Ubuntu. His PhD in International Relations theory sustains an old flame of interest in the relevance of Frantz Fanon. Mvu taught at American University in Washington D.C. and worked as a research analyst for the Service Employees International Union (SEIU) and Africa Action. Born in Phatheni, Richmond, he dabbles in poetry, runs, plays and coaches soccer, and struggles through Spanish classes.
